POLITICAL SOOTHSAYING. The other day the New York Tribune double with it to create the impression that the remarks it contained were an authoritative revelation of the policy of the coming administration on certain questions of interest to the republican party. The remarks, it must be said, were in the main full of very good sense, and therefore may without improbability be taken as a statement of the course which the new administration is likely to pursue by the matters referred to. The following, which was among our telegraphic dispatches some days ago, was part of the article:

CATAMOUNT CHARLEY. How He Tank Part in a Territe Combine of Pike's Penk.

Testerday the well-known hunter of Tide's Poak, Catamount Charley, appeared in town diding his pisheld mustang, Captain Kid. Charles was dressed in his Sanday clothes and appeared to be in a particularly good lamor, The personal appearance of this famous hunter and trapper is familiar to every resident of Colorado Springs. His tall, hosely-knit figure, his long legs, his dark face, blank year and dowing black beard, which sweets his ashie extrant/ver his bosom, are all well, known to our citizons. Catamount Charley was dressed as we have said, it his Sanday clothes, which consisted of a yellow becisakin shirt and buckshir newsors, both trimingle with a former of his hand, a wide white sombrero on his head and moccasins on his leet. Catamount Charley disconnection of the former of the famountal in front of Alkein & Hunt's museum, and, learing his missiang minitude, removed a leary bear in the store at the time and was engaged in playing a dreamy meturne upon the piano when Charley of term.

 "Yes; yon see it was this way. I was look." "Wes; yon see it was this way. I was look ing oround for game back of the peak; when all at once I heard a growlin' and a hawlin," which reminded me that the mountain lions was not all dead yet. So I crawled around a pint, of rook, and I'm blamed if I didn't see there mountain lions havin' a fight with a monetrous blean. I tell you, it was a biggiffly little lions would make a leap, and the bison would back up agin a rook and take then on his horns. poses they are obviously useful. The threads are made in this way:

Ordinary glass in the shape of a rod, white or colored, is heated by a sori of blowpine process until a thread of it is eaught on a wheel 51-2 feet in diameter, having a face about a foot wide, and making 200 revolutions a minute; and the head is kept up on the glass rod so that it is drawn out in a fine thread upon the wheel. The faster the whoel turns the three the thread of course. Whon the threads are unwound from the wheel they are to into the the wheel. The faster do wheel turns the tinethe thread of course. difforing slightly from the loom usually employed in weaving silk. The manufacturers do not apparently claims that they have fully perfected their process, and with reason.
Anybody who has known the disadvantages of hair-clottl, covered furniture will at once see that if one of the glass threads should break the sonsation of the wearer of even a glass-cloth shirt collar would not be the most agreeable imagnicable. But the listory of science is full of examples of the folly of anying "there is here no shoroughtare." We would have yet no raidroads and no telegraphs and no phonographs and no sleedric tights, if we accepted the best experience of the past as final. Who knows but some of these days men may not only live most constortably in glass houses, but walk and work with ease in glass clothing which will yield no abiding place to germs of disease, and which will not entail alarming bills for washing or scouring or dyeing? of $10,200 F9.
